

Guy Aubertin joins Bionersis as head of industrial development also in charge of Latin American activities

Bionersis, the leader in France for carbon-credit production projects, welcomes Guy Aubertin, expert in waste treatment and valorization, to its management team. Appointed as head of industrial development, Guy Aubertin will also be in charge of all of Bionersis' activities in Latin America.

"Bionersis is already the world leader in the valorization of waste biogases within the framework of the Kyoto protocol," Guy Aubertin points out. "My experience in the field should allow the group to continue to improve the processes it put in place over five years ago, which have made it a player internationally acknowledged in the development of CDM* projects."

A graduate of the ENSG (École Nationale Supérieure de Géologie – the French National School of Geology), Guy Aubertin has been involved in various countries for the last 30 years in the development and management of many projects in the fields of the environment, waste management and energy, in particular with Bouygues, SAUR and SITA.

Specializing in waste treatment and valorization, Guy Aubertin will use his expertise to help Bionersis' industrial and commercial development, and improve the group's performance, in particular as regards the production of energy from biogas, phase II of the group's deployment strategy.
